Col Lewis Richmond
A A 43rd
Sic.

I have the honor to tender my resignation as Capt of Co "K" 10th Reg Cavalry.

I am not to resign for the reason that I am anxious to remain in Service until the close of the war.

The regt. to which I now belong has only two months to serve, and if I were now at liberty I could, without doubt, raise a Company of Cavalry for the Regiment now organizing in that State.

I therefore ask your aid in the premises.

Very respectfully,

Yours Obedient Servant

Frederic Nelson

Argument in case of Capt.
H. D. Ratcliffe.

The best argument that can be made in this case is the testimony of the witnesses as the same has been adduced on this hearing - so fully have all the material allegations of his defense been substantiated by the evidence elicited by this inquiry, that we might safely rest the matter without further comment and expect at the finding, a full acquittal from all blame and an approving order restoring him to duty - It is not proposed to go into a minute investigation of each item of evidence, but to take for granted that certain points are proven beyond a doubt, and to reason from these certainties what reasonable and natural deductions are to follow.

The case establishes that on Tuesday morning, March, 17th, 1863. Col. Walker of the 10th Kentucky Cavalry left Mt. Sterling, in search of Col. Clarke's command of the rebel army; that he took with him rations for either four or five days, and that so far as he could he took with him all men and horses able to perform the duty contemplated by his expedition, as also all artillery then at Mt. Sterling, being four guns, and left the soldiers and horses unfit for duty (the former styled in his official report as "110 dismounted men") under care of Capt. Pinell as Commander of the post.

The only instructions he seems to have left were that when Capt.
Ratcliffe should be able for duty and should return for that purpose (he being then absent sick with an affection of the throat), that the command of the place should thereupon fall upon him; and that if the rebels should attack the town that the men were to be stationed in and fight from the houses therein.

On Thursday, 19th of March, Capt.
Ratcliffe returned to Mt. Sterling and in obedience to the orders of Col. Walker assumed command of the post. It was simply a garrison of ineffectives, a point of no strategic importance as is testified to by General Gillmore, and with Col. Wacker to the post having Chick and General Gillmore guarding Lexington & Winchester there was certainly no very immediate prospect of any body of rebels between the two at Mt. Sterling.

But this consideration did not cause any carelessness on the part of Capt. Ratcliffe. He had little else than a garrison of convalescents, men who had been sick with Pneumonia, Mumps and Measles, who were unable for duty and for that reason were not with Col. Walker, and who although not all in the hospital still had lingering diseases in their system that prevented them from doing the service of a soldier. Some when it came to fighting from houses or other fixed positions a comparatively large number were found to handle their guns, but this was under the excitement of actual conflict, and a very different and much more easy service than the chase march or even guard and picket duty. One officer testifies that of his command only two were able for duty and they were not Privates but waggoners and so great was the scarcity of men fit for that purpose that one of these waggoners was taken for picket duty. The Corporal who was acting Sergeant Major and whose duty it was to see the details for picket regularly made, testifies to the great difficulty in getting the men for that so many were sick. He says there was great confusion in endeavoring to execute the details made by the Adjutant from the several companies or parts of companies.

With this imperfect garrison of unpotent men, the best system of picketing was adopted that the force would allow; as Captain Finnell testifies, "The roads were as well picketed as possible with our force; six roads were picketed with four to six men on each road, I think Capt. Ratcliffe used all proper precautions in posting the pickets, and I was there all the time." Taking for granted that the men able to do so went on picket duty each other day (a very irksome service and unusually severe it must be admitted) the system adopted would have taken ^{daily} 48 to 72 men from the effective force of the garrison. After making this detail for picket we will look in vain for serviceable soldiers in his command.
Capt. Ratcliffe remained at this post performing the duties that had been left for him to do by order of Col. Walker and did not leave his place at Mt.
Sterling for the best of all reasons to a soldier, viz: that he was ordered to keep command at Mlt. S. and never received any countermanding order to give up or retire from such command. He would have been guilty of one of the most serious offences against the military code had he of his own volition and without orders to that effect deserted the position in which his superior officer had left him; and I imagine he would have made but a sorry spectacle, and one which no soldier would wish to be placed in, had he reported himself to General Gillmore's Head Quarters and given as the reason of his presence there, his belief that perhaps Mlt. Sterling might be attacked and he did not believe he could hold it! He would very summarily have been answered that his beliefs or disbeliefs were no gauge of his duty, that he was left in command of Mlt. Sterling, and that there he should remain until relieved; and that if, doing his best with the means at his command any harm should befall him, the blame would be not with him but with those who placed and continued him there - And if perchance he should be peremptorily ordered to return to his fast and there remain until sent for, or otherwise ordered. it would be the lightest reproof which any officer under the circumstances could reasonably expect.

This is so patent however to every soldier that further comment on this point is useless -

He remained then at Vlt. Sterling because his duty so directed him, and he knew no reason why he should leave it. All the advices he had led him to believe that Clarke's force, of all others was in no position to harm him.
His Colonel had instructed St. Bierbower to write a letter to General Gillmore saying he had Clarke in a tight place and that if he escaped it must be by way of Lexington. This letter (written when St.
B. was on the way) had been forwarded by Capt. R. to its proper Head Quarters and its contents were confirmed when St. B. personally came into the town and reported that there were no rebels on the way he had come. This was the position of affairs on and up to Sat-urday morning at about 9.0. clock when the letter of instructions came from General Gillmore - a letter containing no positive order for a movement; but intimating in express terms that all things must be put in readiness for a movement if such should hereafter become necessary. So far as having the tents struck, the wagons loaded, the mules fully geared and all in a condition for ready compliance with an order to retreat everything was done that should have been and no blame thus far attaches in the mind of any one.

One half of the wagons and mules were out in a forage train not to return until evening, the remaining half were in the public square ready for an instant movement. Should Captain Ratcliffe then at this time have retreated with the wagons & mules he had and the men and horses that were able to make the march and have fallen back to Winchester, clearly not, for the reason that he had no authority to do so. General Gillmore has very fully said that his letter was not a positive order, and that it contemplated the holding by Capt. Ratcliffe of his position against any force not superior to his own; and the letter of the General to Col. Garrard explicitly shows that he did not consider St. Col. Stonewall force though reported at 300 as such a force from which Capt. Ratcliffe should retire without a fight. He evidently believed as his letter of 20th to Capt. R. intimates that his only danger in any event could alone come from Clarke's force, and this is the only force he names as too large for the Captain to withstand. He left the Captain to understand that against any other force than that of Clarke he was to hold his place, but that if he should hear in time that Clarke was coming against him, he must know that it will be best for him to retire to Winchester. Of course until he should know from ^{some} source that Clarke was coming against him he was to hold his position. This certainly was contemplated by the letter of General Lyllmore. Had he not so intended how easily he could have made it appear and how readily he would have done so by an order to Captain Ratcliffe to fall at once back to Winchester, where he could have covered him by an advance from Lexington. Had it been the wish and intention of General Gillmore to have Mr. Sterling unconditionally evacuated he would have said so by an order to that effect. He issued no such order, and Capt. Ratcliffe should not be sacrificed to supply the omission. But besides the fact that the letter of instructions left it to Capt. Ratcliffe to decide when the exigency had arisen which required him to evacuate, there were other considerations in his mind which tho' they may ^{perhaps} seem light to parties outside of the case were still able to influence him in his conduct and naturally did so. Among these was the fact that Col. Walker was looked for to return on either Saturday or Sunday. Whatever may have been the causes that induced the belief, it is certain from the evidence that the garrison generally, officers and men expected to see him on one of those days. The general reason for this belief is that his provisions would at that time expire, and as he was in a country where he could get nothing to support a command as large as his, it was very natural that he should seek for supplies at M^t. Sterling; and as he had not sent back for them nor left any orders for their transmission to him, it was an all convincing deduction that he would with this command return to where his provisions could be had.

Without orders then to abandon his post, expecting perhaps hourly that the balance of the command would return to the town, and disarmed by the letter of Col. Walker and the report of Lt. Bierbower from any suspicion that Blake was anywhere in the vicinity, can it be accounted to him for blame that he maintained his position and did not retire to Winchester? The answer must certainly be that he would have been without reason or excuse had he done so - on February 18th with 483 men as counted by his scouts, and on April, 2d left Overhill with between 500 & 600 men, 150 men having previously crossed the Kentucky River at mouth of Red River under Major Steele after the surrender of M^t. Sterling. Capt. Finnell thought there was 500 or 600 of them. Capt. Rathbun estimated the enemy at 800 or 900. Capt Craig at 600 to 800. Mr. Crawford at about 600; A. J. Wyatt says Capt Syle (rebel) told him they had 682 men. Lt. Munro counted 650 and odd and there was besides a rear guard behind. There were then fully 600 men. There were also two cannon. The officers and men saw these as they were on the retreat, and Mr. Lloyd bearer of the flag of truce told Captains Ratcliffe and McKee that they had them. Further than this these men shelled (we may honestly presume) fired the shot and shell at Major Brown on April, 2d.

Three flags of truce were sent in by the rebels, and it was not till after he had twice refused to surrender, and had sent Capt. McKee to see in person the enemy's strength; had seen one-fourth of the city in flames, and the remaining parts ready to be kindled from the torches flying through the streets; had been importuned by Esq. Ricketts and Mr. Lloyd two influential citizens to yield and thus save their lives and property of the city; and had heard from Capt. McKee that it was no longer to hold out, as the whole town would be burned if he did; that he ceased to wage the unequal contest. And let it be remembered that Capt. McKee was no willing advisor for a surrender. No man had less to expect from the rebels than he, as his subsequent imprisonment has proved. He had made himself obnoxious to their deepest hate, and it was only when he saw that all hope on our side was useless that he agreed with Capt. R. to surrender himself to the uncertain mercy of the foe. Captain R.

But it may be said, as has been intimated that the letter of General Gillmore contemplated and directed the sending out of scouts, some 20 miles to the front. It certainly did but unfortunately for him. Capt. Ratcliffe had neither the horses or men fit for this service. He made search among them but was unable to find either, that could go ten miles. The men and horses of his command that were able were exhausted in the best system of spike & service that the force could allow. He had no horses able for scouting purposes and the Lt. who took the squad of ~~25~~ out on Sunday morning as a reconnoitering party when asked if they were mounted said he supposed it would be called mounted, they were on something, but not well mounted. The rebels scorned these horses as a prize, and refused to take them away. Capt. R. however did not let the opportunity pass to let General Gillmore know his true condition. He told him he had not the material to keep up strong scouting parties, that he was picketing as well as he could, and that if he had so well armed and well mounted men, he would be able to keep the point well guarded.

As to this request for so well mounted men, General Gillum testifies that the request may have been made but he does not remember it.
Lieutenant Wilson if present would prove its existence and the fact of its being sent. In the absence of this the affidavit of Capt. R. is explicit upon the point. It is not certain that these horses could then have been in time to have done much service, but the fact of sending for them shows that Capt R. was ever alive to the necessities of his position and suffered no opportunities to pass that he did not improve to render more secure his position. He could hardly be expected to know however that Col.
Walker sent out after a particular enemy would allow that enemy in the short distance he travelled to "double on his track" and actually come in behind him on the spot he had just left. It was fair to presume that at least in the direction he had gone all was safe, and this was so whether Capt. R. had more than or few, able scouts or none at all.

It so happened however that in some manner Cluke did get around Col. Walker's force; and about midnight of Saturday, Capt. R. was informed by a negro, ^{and by his flight} that the rebels were coming in on the Owingville Road and were then about six miles off. He immediately started a messenger, the witness Perry, to Col. Garrard, detailing the above fact and the source of his informa-tion and asking assistance. The answer to that letter, be it satisfactory or not, did not reach Capt. Ratcliffe until long after the surrender, and hence it is useless herein to consider it either as to its merits or its taste.
The messenger started at 1 1/2 o'clock Sunday morning, and delivered the dispatch to Col. Garrard at Winchester at 3 1/2 o'clock of the same morning.
The distance between the two points is 15 miles. The messenger travelled it in two hours. It was (11) eleven hours after receipt of the message when Col. Garand was at Mt. Sterling! It may be that he was not in duty bound to go at all. If not, he may be excusable for going slowly, altho' the messenger told him that he had been fired at six or eight times by the rebels as he came out of Mt. Sterling with the dispatch. Inquiring into this matter may belong to a different Council and I pass the subject.

I deem it unnecessary to inquire into all the particulars of the fight. I should feel I was doing injustice to the memory and good sense of this Court did I enter into detail to prove from the record the facts there so palpably certified. I believe the Court is satisfied that Col. Roy S. Clarke and Lt. Col. Stoner and Major Steele with other rebel officers were all at the fight at Mt. Sterling and that their force was about 600 men. Major Brown says that Clarke crossed the Cumberland and Mr. Kee were in the street more than the remaining company officers and hence saw more fully all the dangers by which they were environed.

During the entire time of the fight Capt. Ratcliffe was true to his charac-ter, efficient, brave and watchful.
He did not lose his presence of mind and was cool, calm and collected. He encouraged his men from place to place, and no shade of fear much less of cowardice crossed his features.
The testimony of all his brother officers sustains his good name as a patriot and a hero. The Lt. Colonel of his regiment speaks most approvingly of his character and brilliant con-duct as a soldier and officer. Major Brown & Taylor confirm him, for they have seen him under fire and know that he is brave - and the frequent jealousy of equal rank does not allow a Captain to say one word against the noble and faithful manner in which Capt. Ratcliffe has ever discharged his duty as a soldier of the Republic!

Under more auspicious circumstances his efforts have redounded to the profit and honor of our arms, and in this case though perhaps unsatisfactory in its result there is nothing of disgrace or dis-honor. Our cause was maintained with an earnestness, patriotism and fidelity that severely tested the temper and tactics of the foe and when surrender took place it was the result of proper military considerations and not the dictation of fear nor unfounded apprehension.

Relying upon the practical judgment which each member of the Court brings to this case, and confident that no further comment can make any of the matters herein more clearly understood than already they are, I commit to your judgment and scrutiny that highest jewel in the coronet of the soldier, his honor.

If he has himself sustained it you will protect it; if it has been wrongfully or accidentally impeached, you will confirm it in its original purity, and say to the General Commanding that in his hands the integrity of our National cause is in no unworthy keeping -

Statement of Capt. H. D. Katteloff, 10th Kentucky Cavalry, U.S. Volunteers

I have heretofore made an official report of the fight and surrender of Lt. Sterling on March 22, 1863. That report was given by me to Col. Walker to be by him forwarded through the proper channels to the Head-Quarters of the General Commanding. It seems never to have reached that destination. That accident or other cause has prevented its regular transmission is to me unknown. The evidence of Major Brown establishes the fact of my having made such report and of its receipt by Col. Walker. As that report was written while the matter were still fresh in the memory of all and set forth, though in condensed form, the facts that prompted my conduct during the entire contest; and as I have not had the benefit of the same as an official report to Head-Quarters of the Department I adopt the same as my statement herein, the same being true in every particular and to which I only desire to add a few remarks suggested by

I have heretofore made an official report of the fight and surrender of Mlt. Sterling on March 22, 1863. That report was given by me to Col. Walker to be by him forwarded through the proper channels to the Headquarters of the General Commanding. It seems never to have reached that destination. Official Report of the Surrender of Mt. Sterling.

Mount Sterling, Sunday, March 27, 1864.

Colonel Walker, of the Tenth Kentucky Cavalry, left Mount Sterling on Tuesday March 17, taking with him all the guides who were with him at the time he left the town. He left in a wagon, and he was accompanied by his command, and he was accompanied by his command, and he was accompanied by his command. At this time I was absent from Mount Sterling, being sick in the country seven miles distant, but desiring to know how things were progressing, and thinking it best for my own safety, I concluded to return to Mount Sterling immediately. I arrived at said place about twelve o'clock Tuesday, March 17. I was then informed by Quartermaster Potter, of the Tenth Kentucky Cavalry, that by order of Colonel Walker I was to take command. I did so, and desiring to perform my duty ably, caused all the roads to be picketed at once. Quartermaster Potter then informed me that Colonel Walker ordered that we should fight the rebels, were we attacked by them. I then ordered a consolidated report, which was made out, showing all the men we had, both sick and well, amounting to two hundred and fifty, one hundred and seventy-five of whom were able to fight from horses. Had we taken the open field not more than one half that number would have been able to do duty; but as we were instructed to fight from the houses, many could do that who would not have been able to take the field.

I made all requisite preparations to fight, should the enemy make his appearance. Nothing of importance occurred until Saturday, the 21st ult., when Lieutenant Stebbins came from Hazel Green, informing me that he heard of no enemy in force. I expected Colonel Walker would be at Mount Sterling on Saturday or Sunday. Still, I kept the front well picketed, which left no opening through which the enemy could enter to take us by surprise.

On Saturday night, about twelve o'clock, one of the pickets came in from the Owensville Pike, and reported the enemy within five miles of Mount Sterling, making his way from the Owensville to the Mayeville Pike. As I was situated I could not fall back to Winchester safely, believing if I made the attempt my whole command would be cut to pieces. Knowing there was a Federal force at Winchester, I sent a dispatch to the commander immediately, giving him all the information I knew of the enemy, and, believing that he knew my situation, trusted that he would reinforce me quickly. I then called out all my men, placing them in the best situation I could in the houses, giving the commissioned officers full instructions to fight and keep the enemy back as long as possible, in order that more time might be given for reinforcements to come. I considered Colonel Oake in a very critical position. Colonel Walker, of the Tenth Kentucky Cavalry, and Colonel Wilson, of the Forty-fourth Ohio Mounted Infantry, were in the rear, and the Federal forces at Winchester in front. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, I thought that I then sent one Lieutenant with ten men of the Mayeville Pike, and strengthened the pickets on all the other roads. About two o'clock on Sunday morning the scout on the Mayeville Pike came in, reporting that the enemy's pickets were within five miles of the town. They fired upon them and fell back to town. I then sent ten more men on the same road, that we might keep up a strong appearance. They were fired at by the enemy about half a mile from town, and they returned the fire as long as their ammunition lasted, then fell back to town, and rallied to their appointed places. I then sent skirmishers upon the same road on foot, who were driven in by a superior force, reporting that the enemy was taking possession of the houses in town that we did not occupy. At daylight Colonel Oake sent a demand for an unconditional surrender of the town. I replied that I would not surrender. The fight then commenced in earnest. Oake's forces commenced to burn the town on the Winchester Pike, which communicated its flames to the old Montgomery Hotel, used as a hospital. The fire then spread to a row of buildings near the Court-house, in which now I had about sixty men. Casting a glance down the street leading to Owensville, I saw the rebels ready to apply their torches to every house. I then went to the Court-house to cheer up the men who were sick, and placed those men who were being carried out to some other place, where they might fight to advantage.

While at the Court-house, I was informed that a flag of truce was coming in. I went down and met the bearer—a prominent citizen—who informed me that the enemy numbered between seven and eight hundred, and two howitzers. For the sake of the soldiers, the women and children and the property in town, and as the rebels were going to burn every house in the place, having the position and power to do so, the messenger begged them to let him go in, for God's sake, with a flag of truce. I did not pay much attention to him, and was about to send him with the understanding that if any bearer came again with a flag of truce demanding a surrender, I would not respect it. At this time Captain McKee, of the Fourteenth Kentucky Cavalry, and Provost Marshal of Mount Sterling, came up and said we were compelled to surrender. Considering the position the enemy had, we could not resist them longer than twenty minutes. In that time the destruction of life and property would be distressing. He then said what the messenger had said was true. I then considered it was best to save those brave men who were willing to fight against such odds, that they might have an equal chance some other day, as I had lost all hope of receiving reinforcements from any source. I then yielded to Captain McKee's judgment, at about twenty minutes past nine o'clock A.M. I must say, after having seen their numbers and becoming acquainted with their arrangements, that we were right, and my conscience is clear. Our loss is four killed, and I was informed one or two wounded. The enemy's loss in killed and wounded is not known certainly. It is reported that they lost many mortally wounded, and many more wounded. I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant, J. M. Oake.

I feel that the testimony which has been examined before this ~~Respectable~~ Court has sustained all the material points of my foregoing statement. Certainly, in no important particular is it gainsayed or disproved. My inability to procure St. Bernard's de-fined me of the endorsement he would make to my personal statement that at the moment of the surrender, the enemy was prepared to use his cannon upon the Court House. The testimony is conclusive of the possession by the rebels of two guns, seen by most if not all of our officers and men on the retreat, and in the absence of the same positive testimony, I still think the Court will honestly presume (certainly a natural and sensible presumption) that these guns were brought against 21st. Steadily, certainly, for use and not as an ornamental appendage. Certainly it is, as a fact, that the guns were there and in all respects ready for use. I leave it to the proper judgment of the Court to say what is the reasonable inference in the premises.

This letter of instructions from Brig.
General D. A. Gilmore to me of date March 20th. 1863. is in evidence. It is also proved that this letter was received by me Saturday morning March 21st 1863.
The letter shows by its terms that it was a letter of instructions and not an order to move. If there had before been any doubt upon this point, the testimony of General Gilmore settles the matter and makes the letter one more of information and advice than of command.
My judgment to information and advice was called into exercise by its contents and I was expected by its terms to govern my conduct by the facts which I should transpire after its reception. If a force other than Clarke's should come against me I should resist them, defend my position and not run away in advance.
If however I should hear that Clarke was coming by ^{way of} the position in which I was, then I must if I could do this safely retire to Winchester, because the letter informed me I could not stand against his (Clarke's) force. The letter also informs me that the front should be well guarded. Unfortunately for me I had not the force either in mind, quality, or quantity with which to do this either as I would have desired or as the General's letter of instructions contemplated. As is fully shown my command were ineffective; men who were unable to go on duty with Col.

Hacker and hence had been by him left behind - convalescents whose bodies were still ailing and wasted and weakly, although their spirit rallied quickly under the excitement of a fixed resistance to a coming foe. For all purposes of scouting my horses were completely worthless.
I sought among them in vain for a sufficient number to go ten miles. What could be used for that purpose were in continuous use for picket. They had been in long and severe service, and were mostly worn out, lame and contaminated. So miserable a collection were they that with a very few exceptions the rebels declined and jeeringly refused to take them as a gift. Under these circumstances I sent back by the hand of the courier who brought the letter of Genl Gilmore to me, on Saturday March 24th 1863 the letter of which the following is a copy, as I have collected it.

"Saturday, March 21st 1863."
"Hd. Qu. H. Sterling, Kentucky."

"Dear Sir:

"I would inform you of the 20th of "inst, in reply, will say, all the 'ten-hoo' are "struck and in vagabond. I will keep the post "as well protected as I can considering that "I have no horses worth anything, and my "men are had off, left as sick and con-"vallescent. If you will send me (so) eighty
"well-armed and well-mounted men I can "then keep the post so well secured, as to "enable me to face back to Winchester with "safety should Blake and his forces come
"this way. Should they come upon us before
"I can get positive orders from you what
"I shall do. I will meet them with a warm
"reception. I have placed in the Court "House about (so) sixty guns with ammunition "and arranged other houses to use, as we "were instructed by Col. Mackey to fight
"from houses should the rebels come.
"Please let me hear from you immediately."

"Yours very respectfully,
"Capt. W. D. Catlett
"Commanding"

To this letter no response came to me. On Saturday afternoon I made a vain effort to find among our horses enough able to serve for a scouting party. All that could be used for any practical purpose were out on picket duty, as I kept all the roads full picketed so far as the nature and strength of my command would allow.

All the advices I had and all the information I could obtain led me to believe that Clarke's force if not taken, would get out by way of Red River, Winchester and Lexington. Col. Walker's report told me so; St. Bierbower's return and report confirmed this expectation and General Gillmore's letter said to me that Col. Walker was in the best position to know. I believed at the time and still believe that General Gillmore entertained the same opinion as to the course the rebels would take or he would have peremptorily ordered me to Winchester whither

All the advice I had and all the information I could obtain led me to believe that Clarke's force if not taken, would get out by way of Red River, Winchester and Lexington. Col. Walker's report told me so; St. Bierbower's return and report confirmed this expectation and General Gillmore's letter said to me that Col. Walker was in the best position to know. I believed at the time and still believe that General Gillmore entertained the same opinion as to the course the rebels would take or he would have peremptorily ordered me to Winchester whither

kind, quality, or quantity with which
or as the General's letter of instructions
contemplated. As is fully shown
who were unable to go on duty, with Col.
Stalker and hence had been by him
were still ailing and wasted and weakly,
ing my horses were completely worthless.
I sought among them in vain for a suf-
condemned. So miserable a collection
these circumstances I sent word by the
letter of Genl Gilmore to me, on Saturday, March 21st 1863. the letter of which the following is a copy, as I have collected it.

"Hd. Qu. 11th. Stealing. Kentucky."

"Genl Gilmore:

"Dear Sir:-

"I need you of the sort;
"inst, in reply will say, all the 'ten hoc are "struck and in vagabond. I will keep the front "as well picketed as I can considering that "I have no horses with anything and my
"men are had off, left as sick and con"sulted. If you will send me (80) eighty
"well armed and well mounted men I can "then keep the front so well scouted, as to "enable me to fall back to Winchester with
"safety should Blake and his forces come
"I can get positive orders from you what
"I shall do. I will meet them with a warm
"House about (60) sixty guns with ammunition
"and arranged other houses to use, as we "were instructed by Col. Mac Ker to fight
"from houses should the rebels come.

"Capt. J. D. Catledge"
"Commanding"

I might do my whole duty, indeed my solicitude upon this point was the all absorbing sentiment of my heart. If in any particu-lar I have failed to do the most with the means at my command it certainly was not from careles--ness nor with a wrong intent.

But even now, with the light of my subsequent knowledge and reasoning upon the subject, I am at a loss to know how I could have done better than I did with the imperfect agencies with which I was entrusted.

Thanking each member for the consideration shown me in this inquiry, and the kind assistance rendered me in efforts to procure the necessary testimony, I submit my case confident that this ~~High~~ Court will guard the reputation and the honor of a brother officer, how humble soever the capacity in which he has acted, with as much of interest, of care and of consideration as though it were their own -
